In a continued effort to encourage rapid dissemination of ground-breaking findings in the field of Chemical Physics, we are pleased to announce that full-text versions of papers published in the Communications section of The Journal of Chemical Physics are now freely available. Under this new policy, any Communication published in the Journal after 1 January 2009 will be freely accessible by anyone.

The Communications section of The Journal of Chemical Physics (JCP) features accelerated publication of brief papers on significant new findings. JCP's continued commitment to serving the scientific community through publishing cutting-edge research in a timely fashion is showcased in its Communications section.

Information about JCP is available at <http://jcp.aip.org/jcp/staff.jsp>. Please feel free to visit the journal's homepage (<http://jcp.aip.org>) to browse recent publications and related content. If you are interested in contributing to JCP's Communications section, you can view the Information for Contributors by visiting <http://jcp.aip.org/jcp/submit.jsp>. Submit a paper to JCP at <http://jcp.peerx-press.org>.

The Editors and the American Institute of Physics—the publisher of The Journal of Chemical Physics—hope that providing Communications free to all will be a benefit to the scientific community and facilitate discourse about developments in Chemical Physics. Community feedback is most welcome; contact us at jrnlpub@aip.org.
