The Journal of Chemical Physics (JCP) publishes concise and definitive reports of significant research in methods and applications of chemical physics. Innovative research in traditional areas of chemical physics such as spectroscopy, kinetics, statistical mechanics, and quantum mechanics continue to be areas of interest to readers of JCP. In addition, newer areas such as polymers, materials, surface/interfaces, information theory, and systems of biological relevance are of increasing importance. Routine applications of chemical physics techniques may not be appropriate for JCP. Content is published online daily and collected into four online and printed issues per month (48 issues per year); the journal is published by the American Institute of Physics.

Submissions: Submit manuscripts at jcp.peerx-press.org. Submission implies that the manuscript has not been published previously and is not currently submitted for publication elsewhere. For specific editorial format requirements and submission information, visit jcp.aip.org/authors.

Publication Charge: The American Institute of Physics does not require page charges for this journal.

Open Access: Through participation in Author Select® and payment of a $1500 fee, authors may choose open access publication for their accepted papers. Authors will receive information during the production process. More details about this option may be found at <http://jcp.aip.org/authors>.

Color Figures: Color illustrations will appear in the online and printed version of the journal at no cost to authors. Authors should indicate at the time of submission that they are including figures they would like to have appear in color in the printed version of the journal.
